Business Succession Planning

A trust can be a particularly useful mechanism for providing business ownership across several generations. The trust may hold investment assets as well as the business interests. A corporate trustee can handle trust administration, providing custodianship and investment management, as well as fiduciary supervision of the trust. When some family members participate in the business and others do not, a trust may provide a mechanism for balancing interests and addressing conflicts without rancor or bias.

Countybank Trust Services is available to help you navigate business succession planning.

Tommy Kolodziejski, president of Vision Screenprinting & Graphics, has been in the printing business since 1994 and decided to start Vision in 2005. After discussing an expansion project over lunch with a Countybank associate, Mr. Kolodziejski was referred to Countybank's SBA lending team.

With Countybank's help, Mr. Kolodziejski was able to secure funding for the construction of Vision's building addition, assistance with paying down debt, and financing new equipment. "The Countybank SBA team helped us meet our financial goals in order to position ourselves better in the marketplace," says Mr. Kolodziejski.
